In late November 1947 on the Tangyuan airfield (129-53, 46-23) east of Tangyuan (129-53, 46-42) there were 21 planes, all of Japanese make. Six were twin-engined, six were single-engined reconnaissance planes and nine were small, single-engined fighters. The twin-engined planes were painted green and dark red, and the fighters were dark gray. The fighters frequently staged maneuvers over the field, and it is supposed that these planes belong to a Chinese Communist airforce training class. Underground hangars have been built at the field.
